Cell Dynamics: Host-Pathogen Interface

8-11 May 2022

Wotton House, Surrey, UK

"It was a wonderful, first-class meeting. I greatly enjoyed it."

Daniel Starr, University of California, USA

(previous Cell Dynamics meeting attendee)

Meeting information

This meeting will be the third instalment of our highly successful Cell Dynamics Meeting series, and will focus on 'Host-Pathogen Interface'. Intracellular pathogens hijack and use the cellular systems of their unwilling hosts to ensure their continued survival, replication and spread. The relative simplicity of many pathogens and the ability to manipulate them genetically has made them ideal model systems to analyse fundamental cellular and biological processes, including cell death and innate immunity.

This meeting represents a unique opportunity to bring together many different experts working at the interface between cell biology and a diverse range of pathogens. With talks from an outstanding list of speakers and selected delegates, we hope to delve further into this important area of research and inspire PIs, postdocs and students.

This meeting is an in-person event and we would like to encourage as many delegates as possible to join us at Wotton House. However, we appreciate that some people may still be unable to travel. Therefore there will be an online option comprising livestreaming and recording of presentations. The recorded presentations will be made available during the meeting and for four weeks afterwards.

Those attending online will be able to communicate with other delegates via the meeting app and will be able to submit an abstract for consideration for a short talk and/or a poster.
